Miss Van Lew's Appointment as Postmistress of Richmond.
The Senate yesterday confirmed the appointment of Elizabeth Van Lew as postmaster or postmistress of Richmond, Virginia. This action has a much deeper significance than the semi-endorsement it gives to women's rights by bestowing an important office on a member of the proscribed sex. Long before the noisy modern agitation was commenced, it was not an unusual occurrence for the widows of postmasters who possessed the public confidence to retain the positions previously held by their deceased husbands. There is, therefore, no startling innovation in the late action of the President and the Senate, when viewed from this standpoint. Its true significance arises from the fact that Miss Van Lew was a staunch friend of the Union all through the war, liberally extending aid to Union prisoners, and sending her slaves through the lines with important intelligence to General Grant. While we have no disposition to rejoice over a fallen foe, or to rake up the slumbering fires of a dead past, it is a just source of congratulation that a true friend of the nation, residing at the central point of the defiant Confederacy, is fitly rewarded; and that the haughty seceder dames and arrogant seceder braggarts who once basked in the smiles of Jefferson Davis, and who preached and practised the doctrine that loyalty implied social degradation as well as political error, can regale themselves with the sight of a true-hearted Unionist whenever they transmit or receive a letter through the mails of the triumphant Republic. There may be well-grounded doubts of the unswerving soundness of some of the newly-pledged Southern loyalists, but the secederhood of the woman who proved unflinchingly faithful among the faithless, and who braved all perils to mitigate the horrors of Rebel prison pens, and to guide our armies to the true point of attack, is stainless; and most fitting is it that she should be honored and rewarded.

At the outbreak of the war Miss Van Lew was one of the most wealthy residents of Richmond, owning a large amount of valuable real estate as well as a number of slaves. She lost her fortune and risked her life by her defiant and persistent devotion to the Union. She boldly furnished food to the prisoners in Libby, despite all threats and menaces. On one occasion she secreted in her parlor a number of horses, which were subsequently used to facilitate the escape of Union prisoners; and she kept Secretary Stanton advised of the Rebel movements at periods when this task was attended with the greatest difficulty and danger. After the war was over she made a short visit to this city, where she wrote a sterling letter referring to affairs in the South, which was published in The Telegraph, and subsequently republished in many of the leading journals of the country. Her nervous system was greatly shocked by the exciting scenes through which she had passed, and after losing health, property, and social status, it is gratifying to know that her eminent services have not been forgotten.

The Cuban Question.
The practical importance of the Cuban question is steadily and constantly increasing. More sugar plantations have recently been devastated, and new obstacles have been interposed to the transportation of the old crop from the interior to the shipping ports. These occurrences, coupled with the expectation that, while all hopes of a yield this year, in some districts, have been destroyed, in more peaceful regions the product will be greatly diminished, are causing another rise in the price of the Cuban staple; and the despatches sent yesterday from Havana announce that there are "more buyers than sellers, and holders demand an advance." The industrial and commercial significance of these events adds increased interest to the political agitation likely to arise at an early period in this country, for the House Committee of Foreign Affairs has now under consideration the resolution to authorize the President to recognize Cuba, and it is said that the Minister of the revolutionary party will be at Washington in a few days to represent in person the patriotic cause.

The Eligibility of Witnesses.
We are glad to be able to announce the passage through the State Senate of the bill to allow parties in interest to testify in all civil suits. The need of such a law and its eminent justice we have already called attention to. There can be no doubt that, up to the present time, Pennsylvania has been behind the age in not altering her laws of evidence so as to keep pace with Great Britain, the United States, and her sister Commonwealths. All of the leading States in the Union have adopted laws similar to that to which the Senate has given a tardy assent. Why, then, should we be behindhand in progress? It is very well for the opponents of the measure to talk of the wisdom of our forefathers, the advantage to holding steadily by old landmarks, the danger of innovations. If such orators as Mr. Wallace, of Clearfield, would take the trouble to examine the history of this very branch of jurisprudence, they would see that there have been constant alterations for many generations past, all tending towards the result which we have now reached. There was a time when the "wisdom of our ancestors" allowed no one to testify who was interested in a suit, either immediately or remotely. They need not have been interested in the record, but if they were even distantly liable for the insignificant costs of an action all their evidence was excluded, their mouths sealed, and the knowledge they possessed kept out of the case and hidden from the jury. Was this a proof of the "wisdom of our ancestors" for which Mr. Wallace has so great a respect? The next step in the right direction was the statute which allowed the testimony of all those who did not appear upon the record as interested. This was an advance which admitted to the ears of the jury most of the facts of the case which were before excluded, the absurdity of which exclusion is shown by the fact that the people thus remotely interested are the ones, of all others, likely to know the facts of the case. Parties who have no interest whatever in a transaction, as a rule know but little about it. A man does not make it his business to investigate the circumstances of an event which is none of his concern. Now the present law allows the whole matter to be laid before the jury, and the credibility of the witnesses is left to the court and the jury itself. By this means both reason and justice are promoted, and one of the relics of a past age of law cut away from cumbering the ground. The old rules of special pleading have been abandoned; common sense has become a greater rule of action in law than it was. We hope the House will, amid its multitude of private laws, find time to pass the proper bill.

HEADACHE. DYSPEPSIA. COSTIVENESS.

No medicine ever placed before the people has so suddenly grown into popular favor as MARSHALL'S ELIXIR. It not only cures the diseases named, but so invigorates and strengthens the whole nervous system that these, together with other alarming affections, are prevented.

As well might we expect darkness to remain after the rising of the sun, as that these diseases will not disappear after using this ELIXIR. We claim no merit for it beyond the good it has already accomplished; neither do we propose with it to cure all the ills to which flesh is heir, but we do assert that for Headache, Dyspepsia, and Costiveness it is the only radical cure. Bitters and Pills will fail to cure you; their effects are only temporary and delusive; therefore, before your vital powers have become weakened by continued disease, try MARSHALL'S ELIXIR.
